Title	Effect of gamma irradiation on total phenolic contents and antioxidant activities of methanolic extract of java plum seeds
Journal Section	Articles
Abstract	Synthetic antioxidant butylated hydroxyanisole (BHA) was widely added in lipid and food lipid as a preservative and it was effective for inhibiting the lipid oxidation. However the synthetic antioxidant raised doubt would be the health impact for consumers. Therefore, needed an alternative substitute of BHA which act safety for human health. The methanolic extract of Java Plum seed (MEJS) contained a diverse group of phenolic compounds, had potential as natural antioxidant. As the antioxidant must be stable against of food processing such as irradiation. The objective of the research was to determined the effect of $\gamma$ -irradiation on total phenolics content and antioxidant activity of MEJS. $\gamma$ -irradiation applied on MEJS at the dose up to 12.5 kGy should decreased the total phenolic and tannins content slightly, but increased the total flavonoid content significantly. An increasing of the total flavonoid leading to rise up both the free radical scavenging and reducing power activities.
